

Rahlenberg Education Center

Flexible, collaborative learning.

Designing learning landscapes that are meaningful and versatile.

Neurological findings form the basis for modern pedagogy. Self-learning rather than rote learning, working out knowledge independently and in groups, and learning how to learn in the process. However, this requires a completely different, flexible and inspirational environment than we have known so far. This type of learning can only be successful if all participants can respond spontaneously and easily to any situation. Flexible furnishings that are both sustainable and ergonomic are thus called for. Our solutions enable educators and students to implement their own methods quickly and easily. In the following, we present examples from all areas of education.

The Maria-Ward-Schulen Nuremberg were furnished with 5-Sided Tables and Cantilever Chairs by EinrichtWerk. The impressive new building combines primary school, secondary school and high school. The architecture as well as the flexible furnishings optimally support independent and collaborative learning.
